BUILDING A REVISION TIMETABLE

WHY ARE REVISION TIMETABLES IMPORTANT?

- It helps set a clear routine.
- It means all subjects are covered.
- You revise efficiently.
- You are held accountable.
- It reduces stress as it is all planned for you.
- It plans in rest and social time.

TIME TO CONSTRUCT – WHAT TO THINK ABOUT

WEEKLY REVISION PLANNER

- What are your weekly commitments?
- How much revision should you be doing every day?
- Are you covering all the subjects?
- Does this need to change throughout the year?

- Print off a revision timetable template that works for you.
- Fill in your commitments.
- Make sure you are building in some rest and some social time.
- Fit all of your subjects in so they all get some time each week.

THIS WILL BE YOUR GENERIC TIMETABLE

- When you are revising a subject, your timetable needs to be specific on exactly what you are going to revise and how.
- Don't just write maths or science, break it down into topics.
- At the beginning of the year you can be more generic with topics, as you move through the year and reflect on your learning, you can tailor it down to be even more specific.

- This is an example of how maths revision could be broken down.
- It is colour coded into strengths and weaknesses.
- It has clear dates on when each part will be revised.

REMEMBER – BE ADAPTABLE

- This timetable should be flexible.
- If you have a test coming up, you might want to gear the revision towards the test.
- You might want to move the subjects based on your school timetable or the time of day you are revising.
